FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

KEN-A-VISION BUYS CAMERA PRODUCT LINE FROM CLEARONE TO OFFER GREATER RANGE OF CAMERAS.

Kansas City, MO - Ken-A-Vision announced today the acquisition of all presentation and educational camera assets and camera business from ClearOne Communications. ClearOne is a publicly traded company (OTC: CLRO.OB) in Salt Lake City, UT and is selling the product line which includes inventory and intellectual property to continue to offer a greater focus on their core business of audio conferencing solutions.

Ken-A-Vision will manufacture and support the cameras from Kansas City, and market them under the names FlexCam and ProfCam by Ken-A-Vision. The acquisition strengthens Ken-A-Vision's ability to continue to design develop, market, and manufacture products for today's classrooms. Additionally, the acquisition supplies additional markets for current and new Ken-A-Vision products.

"The acquisition furthers our reach into the Audio Visual market thus allowing us to provide our customers with a focused solution on classroom technology" said Steve Dunn, President of Ken-A-Vision. "Ken-A-Vision continues to advance the technology of educational and document cameras and the acquisition of ClearOne's camera line enhances our product line and allows us to focus our efforts to supply a greater range and flexibility to our customers."

"Following a strategic review process, we determined that selling our document and educational camera product line to a company that specializes in this business was best for ClearOne and its future growth opportunities." said Zee Hakimoglu, ClearOne's president and chief executive officer.
